LEADING THE WAY WHEN IT COMES TO TACKLING THE GLOBAL ISSUE OF BULLYING.

We are one of the largest anti-bullying charities in the world helping thousands of people, aged 12-25 each week to overcome bullying and the impact it has on their health, esteem, studies and social lives.

We work primarily online through our pioneering website and in partnership with online games and social networks. Innovation is at the core of all that we do and we believe that we can, and will beat bullying.

Within the past year, 1.5 million young people in the UK experienced bullying, with half of them never telling anybody through fear, embarrassment or a lack of faith from support systems.

Through our work with schools, colleges and online communities, we conduct world-leading research on an ongoing basis to help us better understand the dynamics of bullying so that we can tackle it with interventions that work.

Bullying is a societal issue and we advocate that everybody has a role to play in reducing the effect and prominence of bullying. This is why we work hard through partnerships with celebrities, brands and the media to shift societal attitudes and to generate awareness of the issues affecting young people. Our focus is not only on those who experience bullying, but also on those who are doing the bullying. Bullying is a learnt behaviour and we won’t stop until it’s over.

THE LARGEST ANNUAL BENCHMARK OF BULLYING BEHAVIOURS

Published annually in collaboration with schools and colleges, The Annual Bullying Survey is the largest benchmark of bullying in the United Kingdom. The survey gathers the opinions and experiences of young people who are currently studying in high schools and colleges nationwide.

50% of the survey is the same each year, enabling us to track progress and to forecast future trends and shifts in attitudes and behaviours. The remainder of the survey is used to explore new and emerging areas of interest, many of which have never been researched before.

In 2016, for the first time ever, we explored the individual stories and perspectives of young people who bully others. We used hundreds of unique variables to help us identify the key motivations and behavioural triggers for those who bully others.

This year, we focused heavily upon technology and the lives that young people live online, exploring things such as cyberbullying, abuse, online behaviours, online personas and addiction.

We are at a critical moment in our history because there is no real precedent on how to live a digitally integrated life as a truly global citizen. It is our hope that this research will inspire further studies and policy shifts to enhance the digital experiences of young people.

In addition to The Annual Bullying Survey, we also produce a range of other related reports, all of which are freely available at DitchtheLabel.org.

A special thank you

We would like to thank everyone who has helped us produce The Annual Bullying Survey 2017:

- Lord Rumi Verjee and The Rumi Foundation for funding this crucial research project
- Liam Hackett, Founder and CEO
- Sue Jones, Annual Bullying Survey Coordinator
- Yuri Yakovlev, Ditch the Label Research Co-ordinator
- Professor Sheri Bauman, Ditch the Label Research Advisor
- Professor Ian Rivers, Ditch the Label Research Advisor
- Baroness Kidron, for providing valued comments on the research
- Anne Longfield, for providing comment as the Children’s Commissioner for England
- Bullet PR, for PR services
- Proof Reading Service UK, for proof reading
- Plus all of the schools and colleges who participated, with special mention to: Hugh Baird College, East Durham College, Longfield Academy of Sport, Wreake Valley Academy, The Bloxwells School, Outgrove School, St Philomena’s Catholic School for Girls and Colston’s Girls School.
Welcome to The Annual Bullying Survey 2017; our fifth and largest edition. With over 10,000 young people taking part this year, we have been able to shed light on some of the biggest bullying-related issues affecting young people in the United Kingdom.

1-in-2 have experienced bullying, with 1-in-10 having been bullied within the past week. The impacts on health, self-esteem and performance are significant. 36% of those who have been bullied said it made them feel depressed and 1-in-4 turned to self-harm as a coping mechanism.

Young people who have a learning or physical disability or who identify as LGBT+ are some of the most likely to be bullied. Race and religion were also linked to rates of bullying, with students identifying as 'White other/European' being some of the most likely to experience bullying. It is clear that the current political and media climate is having a truly detrimental impact across the entire of society, with schools included.

At Ditch the Label, we believe that it is important to not only provide reactive support to those who have been victimised to bullying, but also to proactively help those who perpetrate bullying behaviours. In our previous edition, we found that young people going through stressful and traumatic situations were the most likely to bully others. This year we find that males are twice as likely to bully than females. Our work with the male grooming brand, Lynx, is especially important as we continue to campaign against toxic masculinity - encouraging emotional openness and discouraging violence in young men.

Our theme this year was to explore the impact of technology and digital abuse upon the lives of young people. Technology is having a profound impact upon all of our lives. It is redefining how we communicate, build and maintain relationships and it underpins our entire democracy. We are at a unique moment in time because there is no real precedent or 'rule book' on how to live as a responsible 'digital global citizen'.

The concept of right and wrong online seems to differ to the ethical standards upheld in our offline communities. In fact, young people have a huge disconnect between the things that happen online and reality, with 44% of respondents believing that only things happening offline could be considered as ‘real life’.

Young people are being given unprecedented access to a world of information from an incredibly early age, and often, without being taught the appropriate social or media information literacy skills required to critically and responsibly navigate around and engage through the internet.

Cyberbullying continues to be one of the biggest challenges facing young people online. This research uncovers the true extent and impact of online abuse, finding that the majority of young people have at some point done something that could be considered as abusive online behaviour.

Not only is the internet redefining the climate of bullying, but it is having clear impacts upon the identity, behaviours and personality of its young users. The data shows that young people feel more able to be themselves online, than they do offline. Perhaps we should be challenging the forces that hold young people back in their offline environments and praising the internet for its ability to allow young people to be closer to their true selves.

Social media addiction is highlighted as a key trend, with the majority of respondents unable to switch off for a sustained period of time. Young people feel that social networks are not currently doing enough about online bullying, with many feeling unsafe online.

Whilst the internet does pose a new set of challenges in the area of bullying, it does also come with a whole host of benefits. Each week, we help thousands of young people to overcome bullying through our pioneering digital support programs which we run through our website and partnerships with social networks and online games. Young people are increasingly turning to the internet for advice and support when navigating through difficult situations both online and offline. The internet enables like-minded and similar people to come together, united by their experiences and gives digital citizens access to powerful communities that were once unimaginable.
As an agent for positive social change The Rumi Foundation’s aim is to nurture innovation by giving people the “space to think”.

In creating a space to think, to question and to explore, The Rumi Foundation has a proven capacity to spark new ideas, to share knowledge and, above all, to make a lasting contribution to our world.

The Foundation has been established to contribute its global network, the freedom to take risks and the funding necessary to endow educational institutions and social change makers of excellence with the opportunity to further develop genuinely exciting social capital. Ditch the Label’s achievements as one of the world’s largest anti-bullying charities, and the work that it undertakes to limit discrimination and prejudice and foster a more tolerant, inclusive and caring world, makes it a perfect partner for The Rumi Foundation’s support.

The Foundation is proud to be involved, and proud to help provoke public dialogue about these key issues.

“I believe passionately that there is no room for prejudice or discrimination in our society, and that compassion, inclusion and tolerance are fundamental rights for all.”

- Lord Rumi Verjee

“I believe passionately that there is no room for prejudice or discrimination in our society, and that compassion, inclusion and tolerance are fundamental rights for all. Ditch the Label’s programmes to raise awareness of the impact of bullying, to engage in a productive way with those guilty of bullying, and to empower those who are bullied, support many thousands of young people every year, and through The Rumi Foundation I am proud to be able to contribute.”

- Lord Rumi Verjee

In addition to being the founder of The Rumi Foundation, Lord Verjee has always shared his success and knowledge through philanthropic work. He is Chairman of WE UK and co-hosts their annual signature event ‘We Day UK’ with Holly Branson. He is also a Member of the World Presidents’ Organization, the Global Leadership Foundation and was on the Advisory Board of the British Olympic Association for the London 2012 Olympic Games. In 2009 Rumi was awarded the Commander of the Order of the British Empire (CBE) for charitable services.

“Made possible by”

THE RUMI FOUNDATION
The Annual Bullying Survey is conducted annually in partnership with secondary schools and colleges across the United Kingdom.

The survey was available for student participation online between 1st November 2016 and 28th February 2017. Students were each allocated time during registration and PSHE periods to complete the compulsory survey.

Upon completion, the data was cleaned up and analysed using SPSS extrapolation techniques, which enabled us to identify complex and hidden relationships within the data.

All respondents were required to have parental consent and all responses were screened regularly to identify any potential safeguarding issues, which were acted upon promptly.

The annual benchmark of bullying behaviours and pejorative-based attitudes. We explore the overall extent, nature and impact of bullying, along with rates of perpetration.
Introduction

By definition, the very nature of bullying is subjective, meaning that everybody has a different idea of the behaviours that are considered to be bullying. We extracted key behaviours which are universally recognised as bullying and asked all respondents, regardless of bullying experience, if they had ever exhibited any of the behaviours.

It is important to note, however, that there were no scales used in this question, so some may be defensive behaviours or small, singular incidents.

I was bullied for 3 years in school by the “popular” girl who was once my best friend. She turned all of my friends against me by telling them untrue things about me that I had supposedly said about them. She left me out of the group and I would walk round school on my own and sometimes I would even have dinner with the teachers because I was scared to walk round on my own incase they shouted things at me and laughed at me.

It goes back years because people would constantly say things about my appearance and the way I look but also a lot about my weight. Around 3 years ago, social services found out about the physical and mental abuse in my family and they decided to remove my dad from the home which I think was good for me because I wasn’t scared to come home.

I wasn’t getting bullied ALL the time including at home anymore. They decided that since there were no marks of physical attacks, they allowed supervised visits and this was so hard for me it was like going to visit a bully, but then he was sent to courses and brought back into the home 6 months later.

But I now suffer with anxiety and depression, when all this was going on I had suicidal thoughts and this was noted by the social worker who recommended counselling. Also my disability got a lot worse and I spent a lot of time in and out of the doctors.

I am now going to see a counsellor too because I’m scared to wake up in the morning because of my weight, I am scared of what people think of me and I wear A LOT of makeup to hide my appearance and I cry a lot over nothing.

I was bullied about doing ballet because I am a boy and all of my friends who were boys played football and went on Xboxes and things like that. They said that I was a girl and that ballet was for girls.

It went on for a few weeks before I told my mum and then a few days later I told my teacher who sorted it out really well. I have also been called “gay” a lot in school because I hang around with girls when I am actually straight.

I spoke to my mum a lot and have gone through a lot of tissues by crying.

Some people I know take pictures of me when I don’t want them to and they share them and put mean texts underneath them. Sometimes they do this based on my appearance and who are my friends.
My friends would shout at me and leave me out when they did things. One was racist to me and my other friend told me he was going to sexually harass my girlfriend.

One friend told me "no blacks allowed." They tell me I’m not important and there’s no point me being there, they mock me for being poor and wearing the same shoes as my mum can’t afford any new ones for me.

Male, aged 12, South East.

There was a gap in my education when I was sexually assaulted by a classmate. Multiple classes started spreading rumours about me, and my abuser walked free of no charges despite police involvement.

I was left with no coping mechanism and nowhere to turn, and everybody I’d spoken to officially (counsellors, teachers, etc) all phrased it in such a way that I was to blame. For around a year I took this to heart, thinking everything was my fault, even though I repeatedly said no.

My friends started claiming I was faking it, and I fell ill to an eating disorder which left me hospitalised and being fed through a tube. As a result, I missed and failed a few of my GCSEs and I live in agitation and fear of knowing I’m never trusted wherever I go, yet a dangerous and abusive boy is fine to continue with no issues.

Transgender, aged 16, London.

I was on Instagram and I have a private account. Somebody that I didn’t know somehow had a picture of me and said that they would put my face on a nude picture if I didn’t answer the call.

I didn’t answer the call. And to this day I don’t know if that person has put it online.

Female, aged 13, South West.

I was sent loads of horrible messages on several social media accounts, sent death threats with people telling me to kill myself. I also received phone calls and text messages attacking me. Furthermore, they were standing outside my house being abusive and saying horrible things to me. Fake accounts were made using my name to be horrible to others and to me.

Female, aged 13, North East.
INTRODUCTION
To help us better understand where the central issues lie, we were able to compare and contrast the typical experiences of either being subjected to, or participating in bullying behaviours between various demographic groups. This data enables us to highlight young people who are at the highest risks of bullying so that we can work hard to help them through our pioneering support programmes.

What it’s really like growing up in a digital world. We explore cyberbullying, online behaviours, social media addiction and body image.
INTRODUCTION

Over recent years, cyberbullying is an issue that has hit the national headlines and had devastating impacts upon the lives of so many young people. An expansion of ‘traditional’ offline bullying, cyberbullying has been found to seriously undermine the health and wellbeing of those who are subjected to it. In the largest survey of its kind, we wanted to explore the current climate of cyberbullying: What is happening? Where is it happening and just how often?

MY STORY

Female, aged 18, North East.

Growing up through school I was generally friends with people older than me or boys because I was interested in football and similar music genres and I was never a "girly girl", this eventually developed into being bullied for being a "slut" or a "whore" because I’m friends with more boys than girls.

The bullying continued for so long that I turned to having multiple sexual partners to feel better about myself. Because of being friends with older people, I did the same things as them and started drinking alcohol and experimenting with drugs at a young age. I was bullied for this which led to further alcohol and drug misuse.

I have developed moderate depression and anxiety and often turn to drugs and alcohol to make myself feel better.

Other gender, aged 14, London.

I’m often getting into arguments with my friend’s boyfriend because he is treating him badly, telling him to kill himself, swearing at him, telling him what to do and what not to do etc.

However my friend does not want to break up with him as he only wishes for everyone to be happy, including his boyfriend. When I try to get him to stop telling my friend those things, he says them to me - however, far worse. I also get these kinds of comments from other people both in person and online.

These aren’t necessarily the cause for my depression, anxiety and panic attacks etc. however they do contribute.
Cyberbullying is a societal issue that requires the full co-operation of social networks, NGO’s, policy makers, young people, educators and society as a whole.

Introduction

To help us better understand the nature of cyberbullying, we asked all respondents to tell us which social networks they have used in the past 12-months, then, we asked those who experienced cyberbullying on which platform they experienced abuse. This data was then extrapolated to calculate the percentage of young people who had experienced cyberbullying on each platform.

Cyberbullying is a societal issue that requires the full co-operation of social networks, NGO’s, policy makers, young people, educators and society as a whole.

ATTITUDES

"Being popular online is important."

"I'm scared of being bullied or trolled online."

IS CYBERBULLYING JUST PART OF GROWING UP?

23% said yes

"Saying something nasty to somebody online is less hurtful than saying it offline."

"It's okay to send a nasty Tweet to a celebrity if you don't like them."
INTRODUCTION

By definition, bullying and cyberbullying are subjective - meaning that everybody has a different idea of which behaviours qualify as being abusive. However, there is a general consensus of online behaviours that are considered to fall within the remit of cyberbullying. We asked respondents if they had ever engaged in any of these common online behaviours to determine the percentage of young people who have, to some extent, perpetrated abuse online.

WHAT THE EXPERTS SAY

"More than a quarter of participants use social media "constantly" and another 16% access it "several times an hour." That means that about 43% of youth are engaged with social media often enough that we might worry that their use has become "addictive" or at least "compulsive," and slightly over a third of survey participants said they would experience negative feelings (stress, anxious, lonely) if they could not access social media for one day. The 39% who think they could ignore social media for longer than that may be like other addicts, convincing themselves that they don’t have a problem. When put to the test, however, it’s likely that many would succumb to the attraction of social media more quickly than they think."

- Professor Sheri Bauman
IF YOU HAD NO ACCESS TO SOCIAL MEDIA FOR 1 DAY, HOW WOULD YOU FEEL?

- 62% WOULDN'T BE BOthered
- 14% WOULDN'T BE STRESSED
- 10% WOULDN'T FEEL LONELY
- 9% WOULDN'T FEEL ANXIOUS
- 3% WOULDN'T FEEL LIBERATED
- 2% WOULDN'T FEEL HAPPY
- 1% WOULDN'T FEEL EXCITED

MY STORY

Female, aged 12, Yorkshire & Humber.

"I was told I wasn't good enough and I didn't deserve to live. One of my really good friends turned on me and helped with the cyberbullying and bullying.

I was scared and upset. Then rumours went around about who I liked and what I did - I was upset and frightened. I didn't want to go to school. I was then ignored. But I told a teacher but the person who was bullying me started crying and said I was bullying her. I wasn't but the teacher believed her and I was told off.

I felt worse because nothing was done and the bullying continued. In fact, it got worse and they called me a snitch and a tell-tale and I was scared and felt stupid.

Then one day they questioned me on what I told the teacher and who I liked and my family life. I didn't say but they kept bugging me and threatening to hit me or tell someone I did something I didn't do. So I told them. But when I got home it was posted all online I was so upset and worried."

Male, aged 16, London.

"Someone stole my profile picture on Facebook and put it as their own to provoke a reaction from me and basically nothing was done by teachers.

It made me feel rubbish and I started to get into more trouble at school."
INTRODUCTION

Growing up in a digital world comes with a unique set of challenges that often have an amplified impact upon younger generations. We wanted to understand what kind of impact the internet and social media is having upon the very real behaviours and attitudes of our sample. We took some of the biggest online crazes and evaluated how young people participate and feel about them.

- "Being popular online is important to me"
- "I'd feel bad about myself if nobody liked my selfie"
- "My life isn't as exciting as the people I follow online"
- "The more followers I have, the more confident I am"
"I have more arguments with friends online than offline"

"People often misinterpret what I say online"

"I don’t really care about who sees my posts online"

"I’d delete something if it didn’t get enough likes"

"I’m not interesting enough to be popular online"

"It’s weird if somebody my age doesn’t use social media"
Have you ever changed your appearance after seeing a photo of somebody you admire online?

29% changed their hair
17% changed their skincare
22% changed their makeup
7% wanted or got plastic surgery
35% exercised more
29% changed their clothing style
5% wanted or got a non-surgical procedure

When is it okay to edit a selfie before posting it online?

- 42% It’s always okay
- 21% Only to remove a spot or blemish
- 7% Only to remove a permanent feature I dislike
- 30% It’s never okay

“I wouldn’t ever upload a photo without editing it first”

“I get more likes on the photos that are edited”

“I think editing your photos is like false advertising”

“Editing photos is harmless because everyone does it”

“I edit to get rid of blemishes and that’s it.”

“I use apps to change how my body looks before uploading.”
Ditch the Label shows us that young people do sometimes present themselves differently online and offline. Previous studies have shown that for some their online profile may be a representation of who they wish to be and cannot be; for others their profile may be an attempt to deceive.

We sometimes also see young people representing themselves as a different sex because they wish to explore the boundaries of what it is to be male or female offline.

Of course there are those who choose to exploit these opportunities and there are those who are exploited by the separation others make of their online and offline lives. We need to better understand the ways in which online and offline lives co-exist today and encourage young people to manage their online interactions safely.

“I would only ever use ‘real life’ to describe something that happened offline. That’s what it means.”

ONLINE LIFE AND REAL LIFE ARE DIFFERENT

“There’s online life and then there’s real life. They mean completely different things. Like if something happened at school that would be real life.”

PEOPLE FORGET THAT ONLINE IS REAL LIFE TOO

“I think sometimes people type things online without thinking about the consequences it could have on them in ‘real life’, but everything is real life - regardless about it being online or offline. People forget that.”

WHAT YOU SAY ONLINE HAS A REAL IMPACT

“I think that cyberbullying is such a big issue because people type things online and they forget that whatever they say has a real impact on somebody offline and that’s why I think it’s such a big issue.”

BARONESS KIDRON, 5RIGHTS.

Read the statistics in this report one way, you can conclude that young people feel cleverer, more likeable, funnier and more confident, online than off. Read again, and you see the tension of creating an upbeat personal brand - where beauty and popularity are the prize and embarrassment and bullying the fear.

In the period from early to late teens, young people’s lives transfer from the relative security and privacy of their immediate family and friends, to something more public. In the digital environment - limitlessly public. As their world gets broader, so too do the extremes. With more people in the race you need to be to be ever more funny, outrageous or glamorous to remain popular. Equally, if you make a misstep you are open to a vast public, known and unknown. Being mocked in public is a raw humiliation for a teen, a humiliation that stays online to haunt you.

It is time that both industry and civil society establish values in the digital environment. Tech companies should respond quicker to young peoples concerns and conflicts, be robust about under-age children on their sites, be more responsible about the algorithms that push personal information like wildfire, manage the tsunami of adult content that presents ‘shaved’, ‘pumped’ and ‘aggressive’ as sexual norms.
